What types of things would it do to scare people? The students love reading these high interest stories. We only do language centers once a week due to time constraints. Haunted houses? What would make this Halloween even better than that? The students love the interactive notebook version. Write a story about a kid who goes trick-or-treating. I printed them on colored cardstock but you could print them on white cardstock and let the students color them. The students love them, too. Costume parties? This resource includes two themed and connected paired passages four passages in all. Start from the minute he or she puts on his or her costume and finish when he or she gets home and put on normal clothes again. Each set of passages comes in a traditional worksheet format and in an interactive notebook format. What was the best Halloween you ever had? Do you have any favorite Halloween writing prompts? In addition to the treats, I also love passing these Halloween bookmarks out at the beginning of the month. The resource includes four sets of task cards that review figurative language, conjunctions, commas, and titles. Describe, in detail, 3 of the best rooms in your haunted house. Remember, you want to build suspense using onomatopoeia and alliteration. The homework pass is a total favorite every year. Halloween Language Activities Halloween Language Task Cards Just as much as my students love math centers, they also love language centers. Click here to grab this engaging Halloween language freebie! What types of food and activities would we have? If you could create your very own monster, what would it look like? My students love read alouds but they really love holiday themed ones. What made it great? If we had a Halloween party in class, what would you want to see? Have fun with these Halloween themed writing prompts. They grab the card they want and a genre specific themed planning sheet and they are ready to plan and write. Typically, we do my non-seasonal language task cards and my language roll and answer games, but I love to use seasonal language task cards, too. When the finish and are ready to publish their writing, they grab a themed publishing paper also included in this pack and complete their final draft. What costumes would you want to see? Tell me everything that happens. While all of the writing prompts are easy to incorporate independently, some of the prompts can be used in collaboration with a story or novel that you are reading in class. There are six different options so you have some choice or you can let the students choose. Write a spooky story to tell around the campfire. Scary movies? Halloween Writing Prompts 1.
