Screenwriters on strike! I swear, it only sounds depressing. Agencies that have no financial interest in producing, and very little in packaging, are having their futures tied to entities like WME, which has gone into the IPO business and is currently committed to changing nothing. The solution these candidates offer is so reasonable as to seem obvious: just start negotiating! This is one of the smaller competitions on this list, so if your script is ready your odds of success are pretty darn good. IMSDB is just as useful for those looking for screenplays of all kinds and genres. None of the announced agreements have been with big four agencies, nor do they offer concessions on producing or packaging fees, other than a one-year sunset clause. In fact, it never stopped negotiating. For example, in response to agency concerns, we clarified language on reporting requirements and increased the length of the deal to five years. That requires focused negotiation followed by presentation of terms to the entire membership for approval. Universal Writers Program Unlike most of Hollywood Fellowships listed here, the Universal Writers Program focuses primarily on feature film development. But professional scripts can be hard to find. That alone is worth a visit. The best screenwriting website for novices and pros alike. The WGA is a great place to meet peers, pick up tips, and grow within your profession. I stress negotiated because members of the negotiating committee – including me – spent hours discussing and debating which compromises made sense, both for this deal and going forward. Certainly one of the best screenwriting blogs. Writers Workshop The Warner Bros. Scott is a college professor, works with students daily, and cares about your success. Not only was there back-channeling going on, there were active negotiations between agencies and the guild. The website offers breakdowns of the latest releases and constantly updates with advice from writers, executives, and even the occasional podcast. So, we think it is time to start negotiating individually with the nine remaining agencies who represent a significant amount of writers, rather than with the ATA. The lab is an intensive five-week program running two evenings a week in Los Angeles in July and August. What about back in June, when David Goodman put out a statement saying that we were going to stop negotiating? These readers can be They're particularly looking for writers with diverse backgrounds and experiences, so if that sounds like you, there's no better opportunity anywhere. Since then, the Buchwald Agency signed a deal, as did a new agency formed by leading agents who left Abrams. Having been in the sausage-making room, I believe the process of reaching a resolution with the big four agencies is likely to be frustrating and exhausting, with multiple false starts, dashed hopes and occasional breakthroughs. Twitter is full of incredible film and television writers who frequently share advice or insider information. The John August blog has become a place people go to for screenwriting news and advice from someone doing it every day. Twitter Twitter?
